Strengthening consumer protection and competition in the digital economy

Wednesday 21 October (10 a.m. to 1 p.m.)
Palais des Nations, Room XIX (Third Floor)

The digital economy is bringing about significant changes worldwide. It is becoming increasingly relevant and indispensable for both consumers and businesses, offering opportunities such as accessing consumers online, finding the goods and services that one needs more easily and in a more convenient way. It also empowers small business to access vast consumer markets. The opportunities offered by the digital economy should be harnessed to contribute to sustainable and inclusive economic development. For the digital economy to contribute to inclusive development, there is an increasing need to strengthen consumer protection and competition in the digital economy, particularly in developing countries.

Digital platforms have been instrumental in coping with the lockdown due to COVID-19 pandemic, for example by facilitating teleworking and home-schooling, where internet access was available. However, as the pandemic evolved from a health crisis to an economic one, competition authorities need to ensure digital markets remain competitive and accessible to new entrants. As consumer habits speed up the growth of online business-to-consumer electronic commerce, the need for vibrant competition and consumer protection online becomes more pressing to continuously ensure a level-playing field and the protection of consumer digital rights. Addressing the needs of vulnerable and disadvantaged consumers needs to be rekindled in the light of both digitalisation and COVID-19.

This session will discuss how to ensure effective consumer protection online and how to restore effective competition in digital markets, particularly in the wake of the COVID-19 pandemic. It will also address how to mobilize the synergies between consumer and competition agencies towards strengthening consumer protection and competition in the digital economy, particularly for developing countries, as well as the role of UNCTAD and international cooperation in achieving this objective.
