INTRODUCTION

(i) The fifty-third session of the Trade and Development Board was held at the Palais des Nations, Geneva, from 27 September to 2 October and on 10 October 2006. In the course of the session, the Board held 14 plenary meetings – the 984th to 997th meetings.

(ii) This report to the United Nations General Assembly has been prepared in accordance with the guidelines adopted by the Board in the annex to its decision 302 (XXIX) of 21 September 1984. The report records, as appropriate, the action by the Board on the substantive items of its agenda (section I), summaries of discussions under certain items (section II), and procedural, institutional, organizational and administrative matters (section III).

(iii) Volume II of the report of the Board on its fifty-third session – to be issued subsequently in TD/B/53/8 (Vol. II) – will reflect the statements made in the course of the session on the various items of the agenda.

I. ACTION BY THE TRADE AND DEVELOPMENT BOARD ON SUBSTANTIVE ITEMS ON ITS AGENDA

A. Review of progress in the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001–2010

Agreed conclusions 486 (LIII)

The Trade and Development Board,

Noting with appreciation the Least Developed Countries Report 2006 entitled “Developing Productive Capacities”, and commending the UNCTAD secretariat for the objective, high-quality analysis and policy recommendations contained in the Report,

Welcoming the activities undertaken by UNCTAD in implementation of the Brussels Programme of Action for the LDCs for the Decade 2001-2010, and urging the UNCTAD secretariat to redouble its efforts in support of LDCs in the future,

Welcoming the outcome of the High-level Comprehensive Mid-term Review of the Programme of Action and calling for the full and speedy implementation by all stakeholders of the actions and commitments therein,

1. Recognizes that LDCs in many cases may not achieve the goal of reducing extreme poverty by half by 2015 – although economic growth in LDCs as a group has reached almost 6 per cent – and that they have been very vulnerable to economic, environmental and political crises that often result in economic fragility and growth collapse;
2. Underlines the continued national efforts accompanied by increased and sustained international support measures that are urgently needed in order for LDCs to achieve the poverty reduction goals of the Brussels Programme of Action and the Millennium Declaration;
3. Acknowledges that policies complemented by good governance at all levels should better address the challenge of developing and utilizing productive capacities in most LDCs. There is a need to improve and strengthen the design of both national development plans or poverty reduction strategies and international support measures in favour of LDCs. This requires that the development and utilization of productive capacities be placed as a high priority in national and international policy approaches to poverty reduction in LDCs. Deliberate policies, strategies and regulatory regimes aimed at improving the domestic private sector and promoting enterprise development, particularly for small and medium-sized enterprises (SMEs), as well as actions to foster dynamic intersectoral linkages, are key for sustained development of LDCs. Such policies should be applied in a non-discriminatory manner;
4. Stresses that, with regard to international policies, there is need to maintain the momentum of increasing ODA flows where there is need and/or absorptive capacity, as well as improving the balance in their sectoral allocation in accordance with nationally owned development plans, and further stresses that it is necessary to increase the share of development aid for nationally owned programmes and projects, and bridge the gap in respect of finance allocated to economic infrastructure and productive sectors, including long-term investments in human capital as an essential element of a country's productive capacity; these measures should be complemented by effective implementation of ongoing debt relief initiatives and improved market access for all products of export interest to LDCs;

5. Reiterates that the Integrated Framework for Trade-related Technical Assistance to LDCs (IF) remains a key instrument in strengthening the institutional capacities of LDCs with a view to enhancing their capacity to benefit from their participation in the multilateral trading system. The most important lesson learned from the IF process is that strong country ownership is critical to the success of the IF. It is understood that the broader Aid for Trade initiative will incorporate dimensions additional to the enhanced IF;

6. Emphasizes that, in view of the serious statistical deficiencies prevalent in most LDCs and the importance of reliable statistical data for policy research and analysis, as well as proper monitoring of progress in the implementation of the Programme of Action, there is a need for continued and strengthened ongoing national and international initiatives aimed at enhancing national statistical capacities in LDCs;

7. Recommends that UNCTAD should continue to support the efforts of LDCs in the ongoing process of formulating and implementing policies and strategies, including through participation in the poverty reduction strategy paper (PRSP) process. In this context, LDCs are encouraged to consider the integration of the relevant policy conclusions and recommendations of the LDC Report 2006 into the design and implementation of national policies, including in the PRSPs, the enhanced Integrated Framework and the evolving Aid for Trade initiative. Development partners are encouraged to take the recommendations of the Report into account in their support measures.

997th plenary meeting
10 October 2006

B. Economic development in Africa: Doubling aid – Making the “Big Push” work

Agreed conclusions 487 (LIII)

1. Takes note of the report by the UNCTAD secretariat entitled Economic Development in Africa: Doubling Aid - Making the "Big Push" Work;
2. Encourages the secretariat to make the Africa report available early in advance of the Trade and Development Board's session;
3. Notes with satisfaction the commitment of the international community to double aid to Africa by 2010;

4. Welcomes the Paris Declaration on Aid Effectiveness but notes that problems persist relating to aid quality and effectiveness, such as the lack of predictability, coherence and transparency;
5. Welcomes the efforts made in the report in raising fundamental questions with regard to:
 - (a) Emphasizing the context of increased ownership for African countries, which have the main responsibility for their development, with regard to designing and implementing policies consonant with their specific development challenges and priorities,
 - (b) Good governance at all levels;
 - (c) The share and volume of multilateral aid;
 - (d) The multilateral structures and modalities for effective aid delivery;
 - (e) Positive aid experiences gained in different contexts;
6. Invites all Governments to give due consideration to the issues raised above with a view to further enhancing the impact and effectiveness of aid;
7. Emphasizes that UNCTAD, together with inter alia WTO, UNDP, OECD and the Bretton Woods institutions, has an important role to play by helping African countries to integrate trade policies with their national development strategies;
8. Agrees that UNCTAD should, within its mandate, continue to undertake critical and in-depth analysis, and provide policy advice, on African development, including attaining sustainable growth and development, with the objective of attaining the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) and the implementation of NEPAD.

*997th Plenary meeting
10 October 2006*

C. Review of the technical cooperation activities of UNCTAD

Decision 488 (LIII)

The Trade and Development Board,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the technical cooperation activities carried out by the UNCTAD secretariat and of the reports prepared for the Working Party, and requests the secretariat to introduce further improvements in the reports, including inter alia in the statistical annex;
2. Welcomes the increase in total 2005 contributions, noting in particular the increase in developing country resources for the financing of UNCTAD operations in their countries, and expresses gratitude for the continuous support provided by bilateral and multilateral donors;
3. Invites all development partners to work together with a view to maximizing the development impact of UNCTAD's technical assistance, and further invites donors and potential donors in a position to do so to provide adequate funding for the technical cooperation activities of UNCTAD;

4. Takes note with satisfaction of the efforts undertaken by the secretariat to improve effective linkages between its research and analytical work, intergovernmental deliberations and technical cooperation activities, and calls for further initiatives in this regard;
5. Reiterates the importance of ensuring an equitable distribution of resources among the developing country regions and countries with economies in transition in the overall delivery of technical cooperation;
6. Welcomes the fact that a significant part of UNCTAD technical assistance is provided through interregional activities based on the thematic knowledge of the secretariat, and urges donors to continue their support for these activities;
7. Reiterates the importance of UNCTAD technical assistance responding to the specific and special needs of least developed countries, small, structurally weak, vulnerable economies, small island developing States, and landlocked and transit developing countries, in accordance with paragraph 33 of the São Paulo Consensus;
8. Notes with satisfaction the increase in total resources allocated to assistance to the least developed countries, as their special needs require particular attention, and urges donors and the UNCTAD secretariat to further enhance their assistance to these countries;
9. Requests the secretariat to ensure that the technical assistance provided is demand-driven and meets the beneficiaries' development goals and objectives;
10. Calls for implementation of recommendations on technical cooperation emanating from the Mid-term Review process, and requests the secretariat to report on progress made in this regard to the next session of the Working Party dealing with technical cooperation;
11. Looks forward to commencing intergovernmental consultations, which may include the report of the Panel of Eminent Persons established by the Secretary-General of UNCTAD, on possible ways of enhancing the development impact of UNCTAD's technical assistance;
12. Takes note in this regard of the efforts envisaged by the UNCTAD secretariat with a view to enhancing the coherence and interdivisional nature of technical cooperation programmes and activities, including streamlining projects into thematic clusters and programmes and closing inactive operations; also takes note of the efforts of the UNCTAD secretariat to achieve sustainable fundraising;
13. Calls for strengthened cooperation among different providers of trade-related technical assistance;
14. Calls on member States to ensure that UNCTAD is in a position to play an important role in the Aid for Trade initiative, in accordance with UNCTAD's mandates, expertise and development approach;
15. Recognizes the importance of paragraph 166 of the Bangkok Plan of Action, and calls for the implementation of the recommendations made in 2005 on the training courses on key issues on the international economic agenda.

II. SUMMARIES OF THE BOARD'S DISCUSSION ON SUBSTANTIVE ITEMS ON ITS AGENDA

A. Review of developments and issues in the post-Doha work programme of particular concern to developing countries

President's summary¹

12. The Board conducted an in-depth review of developments and issues in the post-Doha work programme on 27 September 2006. The deliberations were frank, constructive and enlightening. The Secretary-General of UNCTAD opened the meeting, and there was then an address by the Director-General of the World Trade Organization (WTO). This was followed by an interactive debate with 31 interventions. The participation of many member States indicated the usefulness and unique value of the Board's review in facilitating independent and objective assessment, which builds confidence and consensus on the important Doha negotiations, the multilateral trading system (MTS) and its potential for the attainment of internationally agreed development goals. Participants highlighted the timeliness of the Board's review, coming at a critical juncture after the suspension of the Doha negotiations in July 2006.

13. Participants expressed appreciation for the secretariat's background note (TD/B/53/5), which provided a concise, comprehensive and balanced analytical review and assessment of developments in the Doha negotiations from the perspective of developing countries since the Sixth WTO Ministerial Conference, held in December 2005.

Challenges arising from the suspension of the Doha round

14. The Board assessed the implications of the suspension of the Doha negotiations and discussed possible ways forward aimed at an early resumption of the negotiations. There was agreement that the suspension did not call into question the relevance and importance of the WTO as the central pillar of the international trading system. Participants reiterated their commitment to the multilateral trading system and to the successful, ambitious, balanced and development-focused outcome of the Doha round. They indicated that the WTO must be vigorously supported since it established a rule-based system, which provided predictability, security and transparency in international trade relations that could not be replicated by any other trading arrangement.

15. Participants regretted the suspension of the Doha round, and expressed concern about the uncertainty created regarding the timing of its resumption and the quality, ambition and balance in a possible final package. This uncertainty had been increased by domestic political processes such as the scheduled expiry of the US Trade Promotion Authority on 30 June 2007. It was stressed that there was little room for complacency and that the round was at risk and needed serious action. There remained a window of opportunity, albeit a small one, for concluding the round in 2007 if an early resumption took place between November 2006 and March 2007. The next few months would thus be crucial in this regard.

16. Many speakers highlighted agriculture as the major stumbling block. The view was expressed that the failure to conclude a deal in July 2006 was political in nature rather than economic, as an agreement had been within reach but the domestic politics involved were not propitious. As a result, there were diverging expectations regarding the "right exchange rate" in the key “triangle” of issues of market access and domestic support in agriculture, and non-agricultural market access (NAMA) issues. Others believed that the disagreement was rooted in economics. It was the last marginal increase in numbers that was politically difficult, although it was such an increase that mattered for real trade flows. Some noted that since domestic support in agriculture was inherently trade-distorting, a “dollar-for-dollar” exchange was not possible and greater reductions in domestic support were required. The question was how to reconcile the level of ambition and that of proportionality. Since the proposals on the table were already more significant than those in the Uruguay Round, it was stressed that the level of ambition deserved more attention, while the right proportion of contributions among the various players needed to be considered.

17. Participants noted that the suspension of the round had brought about a realization that the cost of failure would be disproportionately distributed across countries, particularly developing countries, and especially LDCs, small and vulnerable economies and other developing countries with special needs. Also, progress made in many development-related areas had been put on hold, thereby increasing opportunity costs for those areas. This was the case with duty-free and quota-free market access for LDCs, cotton and the elimination of agricultural export subsidies by 2013.

18. Some systemic implications of the suspension were highlighted. It was a temporary setback to the efforts to make the MTS more open, rule-based, fairer and more equitable. Concern was expressed about the possible resurgence of protectionism. The inability of the MTS to yield an agreement might cause the acceleration of bilateral and regional trade initiatives, with possible adverse implications for developing countries and the MTS. Another concern was the persistence of distortions created by agricultural subsidies, which could be addressed only by the WTO. There was also concern that there might be an increased number of more confrontational dispute cases.

Ways forward towards the resumption of the negotiations and beyond

19. Participants called for the earliest realistically possible resumption of the Doha round negotiations. It was stressed that all countries had the responsibility to demonstrate renewed political will and additional flexibilities commensurate with their capacity to restart the round, but the key players needed to play the leadership role. Participants expressed their willingness to do their part and called upon others to do the same. It was noted that the question was not one of “who moves first”; rather, everyone had to work together to make possible a collective movement so as not to miss the historic opportunities provided by the Doha round. Many participants emphasized that the negotiation process should genuinely ensure transparency, inclusiveness, and a participative and bottom-up approach, so as to reflect the WTO’s growing membership and its members’ diversity of interests.

20. Participants stressed that the question was not whether, when or on what basis to restart the negotiations, but how. It was emphasized that the right conditions needed to be in place for the resumption of the negotiations to lead to a successful conclusion. This required “political heavy lifting” domestically, and critical negotiations and consultations had to take place among domestic stakeholders so as to explore the possibility of shifting from entrenched positions. Genuine policy reform would also be required. The importance of quiet diplomacy, deep reflection and the exploring of options was highlighted, so as to enable the right balance to be struck between ambitions and realism. Many concurred about the need for the resumption of negotiations to be based on the existing mandates as provided by the Doha Declaration, the July 2004 Package and the Hong Kong Ministerial Declaration, and on building upon offers made up to July; reopening those instruments or going back would not be an option.

21. An early resumption was deemed important for maximizing the round's contribution to the achievement of the MDGs and the fight against poverty. The cost implication of participating in protracted negotiations for resource-poor developing countries was raised. Many participants expressed concern that the progress on some development issues had been put on hold. As regards Aid for Trade (AfT) and the Integrated Framework (IF), there was a general consensus that they did not form part of a single undertaking, and thus work could move forward on a fast-track and stand-alone basis. The view was expressed that work could also be advanced on duty-free and quota-free market access for LDCs and on cotton issues and other key development priorities.

22. It was stressed that the round's suspension should not lead to a lowering of ambitions in the development dimension of the round. This entailed increased market access and entry opportunities for developing countries, matched by “good policy space”, and enhanced supply and production capacity, competitiveness and trade-related infrastructure. The greatest gains would come from improved market access. Many speakers highlighted the centrality of agriculture and its close link with development, given that the world's poor relied on agriculture for their income and subsistence. The need to ensure food security, livelihood security and rural development through special products and special safeguard mechanisms in agriculture was stressed. The view was expressed that flexibilities should not lead to pure protectionism. Other speakers stated that development should not be equated with liberalization at all costs but should reflect the concerns of all countries, particularly the weakest and most vulnerable. Special problems faced by net-food-importing developing countries and preference-dependent countries needed to be addressed.

23. The importance of achieving a comparable degree of ambition and balance in agriculture and NAMA was stressed, with account being taken of adjustment costs that would arise for developing countries. It was emphasized that progress in services negotiations was important, particularly in Mode 4 — financial, energy, distribution and logistics services— as highlighted by UNCTAD's expert meetings. UNCTAD's work on infrastructural services was greatly appreciated. Progress in other areas was also important in achieving a balanced and ambitious outcome across the negotiations, including special and differential treatment, implementation issues, trade facilitation, and rules such as those relating to fishery subsidies and anti-dumping.

24. It was generally agreed that developing countries needed enhanced support to build supply capacities, competitiveness and trade-related infrastructure in order to benefit from the results of the Doha round. The AfT initiative was considered crucial in this regard. Many participants stressed that UNCTAD's unique competence and expertise in trade-related capacity building had made it the logical partner in that initiative, and thus called for the organization's active engagement in, and contribution to, its conceptualization, operationalization and implementation.

25. Many participants noted the growing importance of South–South trade and called for it to be strengthened, including through the conclusion of the third round of negotiations under the Global System of Trade Preferences among Developing Countries. UNCTAD was requested to play a strong leadership role in supporting South–South trade, including through the exchange of successful experiences across the regions. Several participants highlighted the special challenges faced by developing countries and economies in transition in the process of WTO accession, and highly commended UNCTAD's support in this area.

UNCTAD's contribution

26. Participants commended UNCTAD's role in ensuring development gains from the international trading system and trade negotiations, based on the São Paulo Consensus. UNCTAD had, at a critical juncture, contributed positively to the Doha negotiations, including the July 2004 Package. As the UN's focal point for the integrated treatment of trade and development, with its universal membership and broad-based expertise, it could continue to make an important and catalytic contribution to the Doha round and developing countries' engagement. UNCTAD's consensus-building role was hailed as important, including its role in promoting greater systemic coherence between the trading and financial systems. The Board's deliberations on the Doha negotiations were considered to be particularly useful and critical in raising awareness of developmental issues and reinforcing mutual confidence and understanding on action needed to advance dialogue and negotiations in the Doha round. The importance of UNCTAD's normative function was stressed. Many speakers expressed appreciation for UNCTAD's work on trade negotiations and trade-related technical assistance in the areas of multilateral and regional trade negotiations, services, market access, WTO accession, JITAP, IF, and assistance to Africa and its regional groupings in the areas of trade in services, development benchmarks and impact assessments, the trade and development index, and rules and dispute settlement. The need for the further strengthening of work in those areas and for increased donor support was stressed.

B. Technical cooperation activities: Report on UNCTAD's assistance to the Palestinian people²

27. For its consideration of this item, the Board had before it the following documentation:

“Report on UNCTAD's assistance to the Palestinian people: Prepared by the UNCTAD secretariat” (TD/B/53/2).

28. The Coordinator of Assistance to the Palestinian People said the fact that the Board's agenda had long featured this item attested to the recurrent critical conditions in the occupied Palestinian territory. Both the Bangkok Plan of Action and the São Paulo Consensus had stressed the need to intensify assistance to the Palestinian People, and in response UNCTAD had positioned itself along two axes. The first was to examine the Palestinian economic predicament and adverse economic growth path, and the second was to engage UNCTAD's technical expertise through targeted capacity-building interventions.

29. The Palestinian economy remained hostage to deep-seated structural constraints, reinforced and aggravated by occupation and protracted conflict. It was locked in a cyclical path of de-development, with poverty and social strife aggravated as never before. At the same time, the viability of the Palestinian economy was a necessary condition for any meaningful realization of a two-state solution. However, that viability had been further challenged by new constraints following the establishment of a new Palestinian government in March 2006, and the Palestinian economy was likely to implode over the next year if current constraints were not removed.

30. The $500 million of fresh donor aid pledged earlier in September in Stockholm would not be enough to reverse the decline under way or to compensate for the $500 million in withheld Palestinian import tax revenues. The need to resume donor support could not be over-emphasized, but it was the quality of aid that mattered most.

31. UNCTAD's technical assistance had been geared to creating dynamic synergies between rehabilitation, reconstruction and long-term development objectives. These successes demonstrated UNCTAD's commitment to developing the capacities of Palestinian technical cooperation counterparts, in close cooperation with Palestine. Through highly effective projects, the secretariat had translated research into actions on the ground. In doing so, it had projected an alternative model of international development cooperation, driven by needs and demand, delivered through flexible modalities and devoid of political considerations.

32. The ASYCUDA national team had begun to operate an autonomous Palestinian customs automation system, and the EC-funded technical assistance project to establish the Palestinian Shippers Council was progressing rapidly. However, the present donor position had affected the financing of activities, and the secretariat looked to all member States for active support.

33. The representative of Israel said that he had never doubted and had always supported the professional work done by UNCTAD in the fields of capacity building and technical assistance to the Palestinian people. Throughout the year, Israel had reiterated its support for a strong and vital Palestinian economy. However, he did not think that the secretariat's report contributed to that record of work. For the past 10 years, Israel had persisted in asking why there was a specific UNCTAD agenda item on assistance to the Palestinian people but not on other economic situations in desperate need of attention. UNCTAD could and should continue to do its good work in the field without producing political reports and debates. While there were many inconsistencies in the report, he would refrain from reviewing them in detail. He agreed with the report's findings on issues such as the informal sector and transparency in the public sector, but he was disappointed that the report had avoided the related issues of monopolies, corruption, budget transparency and the enabling environment.

34. It was surprising that, while referring to Israeli and donor measures following the Palestinian elections, the report avoided mentioning the Hamas government and the three benchmarks put to the Palestinian Authority by the international community, namely stopping the violence, recognizing Israel and accepting previous signed agreements. Ignoring such facts constituted a failure to depict the real picture. Despite the reality and the difficult security situation that Israel had faced in 2006, an effort had been made to maintain a reasonable social fabric in Palestinian civilian life. In concluding, he hoped that UNCTAD would continue focusing its attention on the important activities and programmes that concerned all its members, thus remaining faithful to the São Paulo Consensus.

35. The representative of Palestine thanked the secretariat for its assistance to the Palestinian people and for its valuable comments on the economic conditions in the occupied Palestinian territory, which indicated that the Palestinian war-torn economy, already weakened by prolonged occupation, had been launched into a trajectory of accelerated economic retrenchment and de-development. The persistence of the crippling measures and policies of Israel, the occupying power, and their intensification, particularly since the January 2006 parliamentary elections, had accentuated the dependence and marginalization of the Palestinian economy. Military operations, the Wall, closures, and the withholding of Palestinian tax revenues of almost US$ 60 million a month, which constituted 50 per cent of the funds available to the Palestinian Authority (PA), were among the countless measures responsible for the unprecedented downturn of the economy.

36. The current situation had produced new economic priorities – preventing the collapse of the fragile PA institutions and securing salaries for 168,000 employees, who accounted for 23 per cent of total employment. In Gaza alone, 70 per cent of the population was now dependent on the United Nations for food aid. Moreover, the PA, with responsibility for 70 per cent of the schooling system and 60 per cent of health services, was struggling to maintain those essential social services that could not be handled by alternative institutions.

37. It must be hoped that these preoccupations would not be at the expense of planning for socio-economic recovery and development, and that increased dependence on aid tied to political conditionality was temporary. The Palestinians were aware of the economic downside of dependency on foreign aid, and had absorbed the harsh lesson from the current crisis. The PA “Emergency Support Programme” was based on a set of principles concerned with linking humanitarian assistance with development efforts.

38. Ironically, democracy was being denounced for the first time in history in an occupied country, as it clashed with the political will and interests of the occupier and its supporting centres of power. The results of a democratic process called for by these same centres of power had unleashed a set of economic sanctions that came on top of the complex framework of occupation policies that had been suffocating the economic and social lives of the Palestinian people.

39. In addition to the deadlock in the peace process, it was evident that the Paris Protocol, which had been born as a result of Israeli arm-twisting, had contributed to the economic ills of the Palestinian economy. A faltering economy was not conducive to peace, and the absence of a viable Palestinian economy diminished the prospects of realizing a two-state solution in the near future. The matrix of punitive policies pursued by Israel and supported by Western donors would eventually backlash. The losers would be not only one particular government but the Palestinian and Israeli peoples, both of whom yearned to live in peace and prosperity, although that aspiration would remain elusive as long as the Israeli occupation persisted.

40. UNCTAD's programme of assistance to the Palestinian people had been established a decade before the PA had been created. There was no point in holding that programme hostage to unjustified political calculations. In the light of the final stages of the Mid-term Review process, the programme should be intensified and strengthened, in line with the São Paulo Consensus.

41. The representative of Pakistan, speaking on behalf of the Group 77 and China, thanked the UNCTAD secretariat for its report, its in-depth analysis of Palestinian economic development problems, and its persistent support for the Palestinian people. The latter were experiencing deplorable daily living conditions and an economic siege imposed through continuing occupation, and UNCTAD's activities were critical to their ability to overcome “unprecedented challenges” and the ongoing crisis. He highlighted the extraordinary resilience and the exceptional social cohesiveness of the Palestinian people in the face of deplorable living conditions that were far below acceptable standards. This year's significant reduction in donor aid had put the already vulnerable Palestinian economic institutional infrastructure at extreme risk.

42. His Group felt great concern regarding the continuing adverse impact of the Israeli occupation on the Palestinian territory, specifically the unemployment that affected half of the Palestinian labour force, the intense poverty that affected two thirds of households, the bleak economic prospects and the decline in per capita income to half of its pre-2000 level. He also expressed concern regarding the impact of the Israeli separation barrier and the mobility restrictions in the occupied territory and how they aggravated the economy's structural weakness, impaired Palestinian economic stability and increased the imposed dependence of the Palestinian people on Israel. He was disturbed by the finding that 55 cents of every dollar of domestic production was a liability owed to the rest of the world, with 40 cents owed to Israel. This implied that all the aid provided to Palestine in the past five years was not enough to cover the Palestinian trade deficit with Israel. He was alarmed by the one-third loss of Palestinian productive capacity and the loss of one fifth of West Bank agricultural land to the Israeli separation barrier. The secretariat report projected a 50 per cent reduction in annual donor support, which suggested GDP losses of $5.4 billion and potential job losses of 531,000 in 2006 and 2007. This was a recipe for social tension, with a risky outcome for all parties in the region.

43. Development was a shared objective that must not be sacrificed on the altar of political considerations, and he urged donors to resume aid to the Palestinian people to make possible urgently required policy measures to avert the projected economic collapse, measures such as formalizing the informal sector, adopting prudent fiscal policies, and reconsidering the existing trade regime. He agreed with the report that the Quartet's Temporary International Mechanism should not become a policy tool for conditioning aid or dictating Palestinian development strategies. He concluded by commending UNCTAD's credibility and contribution in the last 20 years, and by calling on Board members to ensure extrabudgetary resources for UNCTAD's technical assistance activities for the Palestinian people to help them towards economic recovery and statehood.

44. The representative of Finland, speaking on behalf of the European Union (EU) and the acceding countries of Bulgaria and Romania, noted that the secretariat's report provided an important illustration of the humanitarian situation in the Palestinian territories and of how complex the overall situation in the region was. As the largest donor to the Palestinian people and the United Nations Relief and Works Agency, the European Commission had provided substantial support for UNCTAD's work in such areas as ASYCUDA. The Commission was also supporting, through UNCTAD, the establishment of the Palestinian Shippers' Council to assist Palestinian importers and exporters in promoting their trade.

45. She emphasized the EU's commitment to promoting lasting peace and security in the Middle East region, which, as just underlined by the European foreign ministers, could only be ensured by a comprehensive settlement with a negotiated two-state solution to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict at its core. The EU emphasized its commitment to promoting tangible progress towards a resolution of that conflict and underlined the importance of reinvigorating the peace process. It also reiterated the need for all parties to respect their Roadmap obligations.

46. The EU was deeply concerned at the humanitarian situation in the Palestinian territory. It had made a strong commitment at the Stockholm International Donor Conference on 1 September 2006, and it welcomed the expansion of the Temporary International Mechanism created in June 2006 to channel aid to the Palestinians; the EU and its member States had already channelled substantial resources directly to the Palestinian people through that mechanism.

47. Mindful of the continuing needs of the Palestinian people, the Quartet had decided to extend the Temporary International Mechanism for another three months, and had agreed to review the need for such a mechanism at the end of that period. The Quartet had also encouraged greater donor support to meet the needs of the Palestinians, especially in relation to security sector reform, reconstruction of damaged infrastructure, and economic development. The EU encouraged donors and others in the region to make full use of the mechanism. Finally, UNCTAD's programme of assistance to the Palestinian people should be continued, taking into account the guidance and decisions of the Quartet concerning aid to the Palestinians.

48. The representative of Afghanistan, speaking on behalf of the Asian Group and China, said the secretariat's report highlighted the fact that the issues facing the Palestinians were both chronic and acute and required different solutions. The separation barrier, which had enclosed huge areas of Jerusalem, had separated people from their jobs, schools and hospitals. Parts of the Palestinian territory were cut off from each other and the rest of the world. The siege and the increasing denial of entry of products could even lead to starvation. Furthermore, the freezing of US$ 55 to 60 million by Israel and the sanctions by the international community had almost led to the bankruptcy not only of the Palestinian Authority but also of the private sector.

49. Unemployment, fuelled by the closure of the Green Line to Palestinian workers, was soaring, with continued declines in the number of jobs in the private sector and increasing difficulties for the banking community. There was a scarcity of raw materials, which had resulted in the suspension of many projects supported by donor countries. According to the report, this situation was leading to a "regression more debilitating than that of 2001-2002, with manifestations of poverty unknown since the occupation began in 1967". Economic difficulties had a clear impact in terms of the increase in violence, which in turn had repercussions on the economy and ultimately on the Palestinians. So the Palestinian people had once again been caught in a perpetual vicious cycle.

50. The Temporary International Mechanism could not be a long-term solution, or a substitute for the Palestinian Authority. After all, that would only undermine the Palestinian public institutions that donors had helped to create. Furthermore, other agencies and foreign non-governmental organizations might not have the capacity to provide services in areas traditionally covered by the government.

51. UNCTAD had an exemplary technical assistance programme for the Palestinian people, a programme which linked relief to development and national ownership. All the activities under the programme needed to be adequately funded as per the São Paulo Consensus, which called for the programme to be strengthened.

52. The Asian Group fully supported the secretariat report's emphasis on the need for urgent policy measures to avert economic collapse, including the formalization of the informal sector as a major tool for job creation and poverty alleviation. The prudent fiscal measures prescribed in the report were appropriate, and the existing trade regime needed to be carefully reviewed. Nationally owned economic policies that reflected the aspirations of the Palestinian people, equipped with the required policy instruments and supported by quality international aid, could redress the existing crisis situation.

53. The representative of Indonesia urged the international community to take all necessary steps to put a stop to the constant hostility in the territory in order to give the Palestinians a chance to improve their lives. He highlighted the findings of the secretariat's report regarding the worsening impact of recent developments on both economic development in the occupied Palestinian territory and Palestinian Authority institutions. The report emphasized that, without urgent attention to the core issues affecting Palestinian economic performance, the adverse path of dependence that had emerged under Israeli occupation would only deepen and further imperil the prospects for sustained development of the Palestinian economy. Decreasing direct donor support and continuing dependence on external resources and imports had deepened the Palestinian economic decline and was giving rise to unprecedented unemployment, poverty and social strife.

54. Indonesia called for increased support in the form of humanitarian aid and capacity building. With support from the Non-Aligned Movement countries, the first Senior Official Meeting of the New Asia Africa Strategic Partnership had decided to explore ways of providing aid for the Palestinian people.

55. He agreed with the secretariat's report on the need to assist the Palestinian government on making effective use of international aid and linking it to the budgetary process and national development priorities, as well as on the need to avoid donor aid conditionality. UNCTAD's technical assistance to Palestine was conducted in a comprehensive framework, in close consultation with the Palestinians and in cooperation with other UN agencies. However, some of UNCTAD's programmes were impaired by lack of funding, and he therefore called for greater international assistance and extrabudgetary resources in support of UNCTAD efforts to help the Palestinian people, in line with the Bangkok Plan of Action.

56. The representative of Cuba strongly condemned the present situation, caused by Israeli measures and collective punishment and by financial blackmail by Western developed countries that refused to accept the will of the Palestinian people as reflected in free elections. The secretariat's report showed that, after many years of conflict, the Palestinian National Authority had been placed in a dangerous financial position, it was not able to overcome the loss of international aid, and the Palestinian economy was suffering from a large trade deficit and increasingly high poverty and unemployment levels.

57. The representative of the Islamic Republic of Iran said that the Palestinians were now having to cope with a degree of poverty unknown since the beginning of occupation. The economy continued to contract, with serious repercussions in terms of poverty, production capacity and the welfare of people. The war-torn economy had become fragmented, with a breakdown of economic relations between communities and between producers and markets. Palestinians were surrounded by land and sea barriers intersected by built-up areas, access routes and buffer zones, which obviously made any comprehensive economic policy for even the short-term meaningless. Decades of occupation, repression and conflict and the construction of the barrier had taken a heavy toll on the Palestinian economy and posed serious obstacles to Palestinian institutions in most fields, including economic policy.

58. The forced economic relations between the occupied Palestinian territory and the occupying entity had led to systemic exploitation of the Palestinians. This had resulted in a systematic deterioration of the Palestinian economy, and an amount equivalent to all the funds received from the international community would not be sufficient to cover the trade deficit with the occupying entity. Furthermore, the Palestinian Authority retained only limited control over tax and budgetary management, and aid was now more subject to donor agendas and a complicated planning and implementation process.

59. International assistance should follow a two-track approach, firstly to prevent the deterioration of the Palestinian economy and secondly to assist the efforts of the Palestinian

Government to strengthen its institutional capacity and infrastructure and to expand activities in preparation for future statehood.

60. The representative of China said that unprecedented recent developments in Palestinian economic and social conditions represented a challenge for the long-term efforts made by the Palestinian people and the international community. The present reduction in donor aid impacted on investment and technical cooperation activities. Economic and social development in Palestine had been suffering severely, and people's livelihood was threatened. Palestinian social and economic development and the international community's efforts required a peaceful environment, and he therefore called on the Palestinians and Israel, with the support of the international community, to go back to the Roadmap and make substantive efforts towards peace. The Chinese delegation supported UNCTAD's continuing technical cooperation efforts in support of the Palestinian people to help them overcome the present difficulties and move towards economic recovery and an improvement in people's livelihood.

61. The representative of the United States of America said the region was going through a time of considerable challenge and opportunity. Recent turmoil in Lebanon and Gaza had renewed international and regional focus on the importance of Palestinian-Israeli peace. In addressing the General Assembly the week before, President Bush had made it clear that progress toward his vision of two democratic states, Israel and Palestine, living side by side in peace and security was one of the United States' greatest priorities. The United States was deeply engaged with the parties, its Quartet partners and moderate Arab States to facilitate the creation of the conditions necessary to move forward on the Roadmap to peace. In addition, Secretary Rice had met with the Quartet in New York on the urgent need to make progress on the Roadmap and to alleviate the Palestinian humanitarian crisis. The Quartet commended Palestinian President Abbas' efforts to break the impasse of a Hamas-led government that had failed to govern responsibly, and it called on the Palestinian Authority to accept the Quartet principles for peace: renounce terror, recognize Israel, and accept all previous agreements and obligations, including the Roadmap.

62. The United States was the largest donor to the West Bank and Gaza in 2006, with $468 million in aid, including $135 million for UNRWA. Until there was a Palestinian Authority government that the United States could work with, US aid would continue to focus on three strategic priorities: funding basic humanitarian needs; strengthening Palestinian moderates by expanding democracy and cultivating civil society; and promoting private sector development. The Palestinian people faced challenges, as clearly outlined by UNCTAD's report, and this year's events had added to the challenges of economic development. She urged UNCTAD and other international organizations to focus on restoring law and order, using the Roadmap as a guideline, and to join the Quartet and other leaders in pressing the Hamas government to meet its obligations as a first step towards re-establishing a basis for peace and security in the region.

63. The representative of Brazil expressed his country's solidarity with the Palestinian people and their suffering. The Palestine question was deeply embedded in Brazilian hearts, since Brazil had large Jewish and Palestinian communities. The UNCTAD secretariat should conduct an assessment of the impact of international trade preferences on the Palestinian economy, and of the extent to which these preferences were being utilized. The secretariat could also consider undertaking a forward-looking assessment of border controls for two reasons. Firstly, easing border controls could help enhance linkages between the technologically advanced Israeli economy and the low-wage Palestinian labour force. A recent study by the World Bank showed that enhancing those linkages would help boost the Palestinian as well as the Israeli economy. Secondly, improved border controls could help integrate the Palestinian economy with the neighbouring countries of Jordan and Egypt, providing more viable prospects for the Palestinian economy.

64. The representative of Norway expressed her country's deep concern over the humanitarian situation in the Palestinian territory. The UN appeal, launched in May 2006, was still far from being fully met, and Norway, together with Sweden and Spain, had sought to mobilize support for the appeal during donor meetings in Geneva in July and in Stockholm in September. Her country's humanitarian assistance to the Palestinian people in 2006 amounted to US$ 45 million. In addition, Norway had allocated approximately US$ 55 million to support Palestinian development efforts, either bilaterally or through the UN, ICRC or the NGO community. Norway had also contributed to some of UNCTAD's technical assistance activities in the Palestinian territories.

65. The humanitarian crisis could not be resolved unless a political solution was achieved. The parties had a responsibility to do their utmost to achieve a sustainable solution, and the international community should support initiatives that could restart the political process. Norway stressed the importance of free access and free movement in the Palestinian territory, since that was critical for ensuring basic humanitarian supplies and services, as well as for providing a basis for economic growth. Norway also urged Israel to release the withheld Palestinian customs revenues, totalling US$ 500 million, as this would go a long way to address the current fiscal crisis.

66. A seamless transition between humanitarian assistance and long-term development in the Palestinian territory would be very important. The common long-term objective of building viable Palestinian institutions remained and should not be lost amid short-term relief efforts.

67. The representative of Egypt said that a question had been posed as to the rationale behind maintaining a special programme of assistance for the Palestinian people, but the answer was clear – the Palestinian people were the only people under occupation for 50 years, and there was therefore every justification for supporting the Palestinians as much as possible. This was also the expressed will of the international community, recently reiterated by ECOSOC in its resolution on the economic and social impact of the Israeli occupation on the Palestinian people. Indeed, there were several international references attesting to the fact that the Palestinian people were going through difficult times; they included the São Paulo Consensus, paragraph 35 of which clearly stated that UNCTAD's programme of assistance to the Palestinian people should be strengthened with adequate resources. UNCTAD's Assistance to the Palestinian People Unit played a key role in supporting the Palestinians and provided a unique model for linking relief to development.

68. The secretariat's report highlighted the emergence of a new format of international aid to the Palestinians, one of heightened politicization. The Palestinian development strategy should be nationally owned, and any assistance should fall within that rationale with the aim of promoting Palestinian development efforts. As the report noted, while the quantity of aid was important, it was above all the quality of aid that mattered. The general framework guiding international assistance to the Palestinians should pave the way to economic independence, leading to political independence as called for by UN resolutions.

69. The Coordinator of Assistance to the Palestinian people said that the secretariat would be happy to see the day when there was no longer a need for this agenda item – when Palestine could become a full member of UNCTAD and no longer require a special programme of assistance. The complex issues of economic governance, including corruption, monopolies and rent-seeking, were squarely addressed in an in-depth study released earlier in the year by the secretariat; it was entitled “The Palestinian war-torn economy: Aid, reform and development” and covered the interaction between national governance, donor agendas and regional commercial interests. Moreover, as early as 1999, UNCTAD had pioneered research on cross-border trade facilitation issues, and its more recent work on alternative Palestinian maritime trade routes was now being used by the World Bank in designing trade facilitation solutions adapted to the current circumstances. Finally, he noted that the United Nations was associated with the political conditions set out by the Quartet, of which it was a member. However, all agencies had been instructed by the UN Secretary General in April 2006 to maintain their economic and social assistance to the Palestinian people, in close cooperation with Palestine and through official Palestinian institutions and existing counterparts. Political and diplomatic contacts and issues were to remain the prerogative of the Secretary-General. UNCTAD was adhering fully to these guidelines.
